TO MAKE EXECUTIVE'S SALARY $100,000 PER YEAR.

(Special Correspondence.) WASHINGTON, D. C., December 24. -President Roosevelt endorses the Bourne Bill to increase the salary or the President to $100,000 after March 4th next. The President does not wish it to be understood that he thinks he has been underpaid, but as he has had 7 years experience in running the Executive establishment he believes he knows enough about it to be certain Honolulu. Honolulu standard time is the place without spending more than that it takes good management to ran the salary allowed. The government furnishes the establishment, keeps up the grounds, maintains the stable and green houses and also makes arrangements for the traveling of the Presiwhich is alfost a public function, must Phone 1299. be paid for almost wholly from the President's private purse. President Roosevelt and his family have been liberal entertainers. The President knows personally people from all over the country, and in fact, from all over the world, and he has gathered under the White House roof all sorts of people. It is recalled that at one midday luncheon' "Bat" Masterson, the former rough rider and Western town marshal, rubbed elbows with Ambassador Bryce, who was there informally. Captain "Bill" McDonald, the Texas ranger, has been just as welcome a guest at the White House as John Morley or any other distinguished light from across the seas. These informal luncheons, which have been a midday feature of the White House life for the past 7 years are not over expensive but the state functions cost much and real money, and if President Roosevelt had not had an income from outside sources he would now be leaving the White House with the problem facing him of making a living. President Roosevelt is in a very comfortable situation in that he has a modest little fortune, a good home and an earning capacity through his pen. But the President can conceive of some of his successors not being so fortunate and he favors the idea of either granting a life annuity say of $10,000 or $15,000, but does not want it to apply to himself, of if this plan does not seem feasible he would favor the Bourne Bill,
